Sir:

Greetings! May this letter find you well.

As we experience the realities of the current global health crisis, including the restrictions as time unfolds, we share in the frustrations over the cancellations or postponements of festivals, concerts, student ensembles and performances, and many other music-making get-togethers.

But everything is not lost. Teaching, learning, and performing music can continue and even thrive through the remarkable tools, resources and people that engage music online

On February 15, 2022, the Culture and Arts Office of the Province will conduct a Webinar on "How to Teach Music Online." The said event is a collaborative effort between the Culture & Arts Office of the province and the National Commission on Culture and the Arts (NCCA). Among other things, this webinar aspires to provide insights on:

- How to be more comfortable teaching online and how to earn from it;
- Where to go for support from experts and music educators;
- How to create or adjust your lesson plans for an online learning environment;
- Where you can look for free and intuitive resources as both teacher and learner.

Relative to this activity, may we ask for your endorsement and wholehearted support of the project by asking DepEd Music teachers (and other educators who are not in the music discipline but are interested in the topic) to attend this unique learning session. Similarly, we are encouraging interested SHS students to be with us during the online event.

We believe that by engaging in activities such as this, we are nurturing a constructive mindset among our people, allowing them to follow their passions and grow as individuals and as professionals, and earn income from it. Hopefully, you can support us in this endeavor. Looking forward to a positive response on the matter.

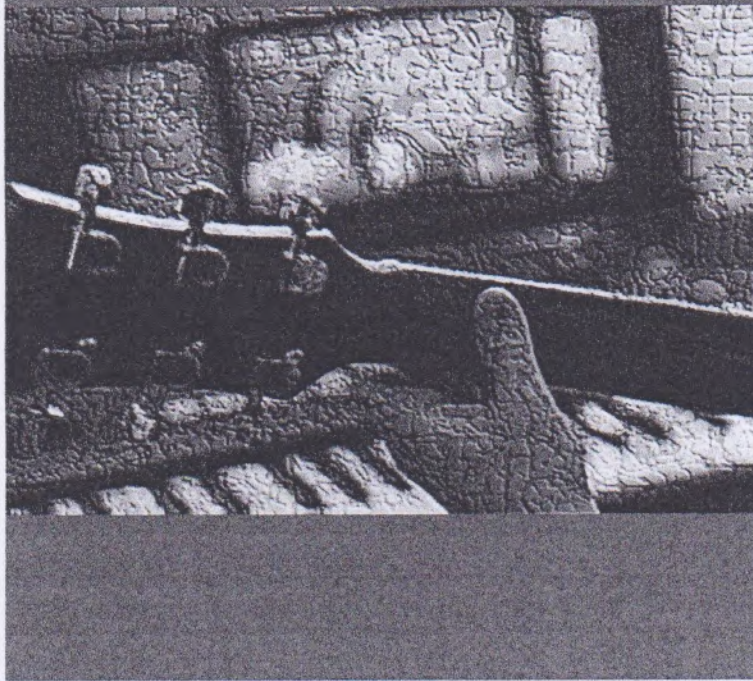

Respectfully,

GEMMA MINDA ISO
Culture and Arts Officer-Designate
